Heather is a city girl. She is black, beautiful, free-spirited, and at 23, she has really had her fair share of drama. So when she sees an ad for a Texas oil company, as a PA to the company's owner and CEO, she thinks that this will be the perfect break for her from New York. Also, since it is just a short 3-month contract, she really starts to view it as a working holiday. This is exactly what she needs.

At 44, Channing is wealthy, established, a cowboy at heart. Quipped with hat and Stetsons, he even looks like a cowboy, and he even has a few horses on his sprawling Dallas ranch. When an ad placed by his company for a PA mistakenly finds its way into the New York Times, it isn't surprising that a New Yorker responds. Channing doesn't expect Heather though, and he is more than a little intrigued.

They work well together, too well. And soon enough they find themselves in each other's beds, wrapped up in an affair that, if it got out, would certainly get more than a few people talking. By the end of the 3 months, they both have a little more to deal with than they bargained for, and choices have to be made...
