Love Crosses Over: Stories of messages from people and animals who have crossed over Elizabeth Allen

Have you ever wondered if that bird sitting outside your window, for five consecutive days since your Mother passed - is not really a coincidence; or a song that keeps playing on the radio - isn't that benign after all; or that dream you had last night, when you truly felt your dog had licked your face - wasn't such an irrational thought? Well, if you have ever thought that somebody you loved might be trying to communicate to you - you are not alone. "Love Crosses Over", is a collection of twelve short stories that explore the theme of communication from the deceased, both people and pets. They are deeply heartfelt and each one has a poem, which builds upon the story, like pairing a fine wine with a wonderful meal. The stories embrace the rich task of inviting the reader to contemplate their own pet loss experiences as more than just coincidence. And in doing so, prompting the reader to trust their own intuitive powers, and tap into signs of life beyond the five senses - particularly during a time of loss.
