Chieftains of the devotional treasures to be found in ancient service-books. They contain, it need not be said, the merest gatherings from an ample and splendid storehouse, a few drops from a cup filled to overflowing. The majority of the Prayers here translated are taken from Western rituals older than Anglo-Saxon Christianity; especially from those sacramentaries of Leo the Great, Gelasius the First, and Gregory the Great, which still supply the English Church with so many inestimable Collects, and would probably have been made still more serviceable at the last revision of the Prayer-Book, had they all been then accessible. (Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and don't occur in the book.)
