Here There Be Monsters James Gabriel

Here There Be Monsters is a book of short stories and novellas that encompass monsters in the classic sense of the word. Monster is a word that is lost these days unless it is describing horrible actions depicted on another. This is monsters in the traditional sense. The Thing, Alien, The Fly, The Creature From the Black Lagoon. No giant Godzilla's in here though. No zombies, No werewolves, no vampires... only monsters. Only some of which have actual names. I was inspired to write these and it is my hope they entertain and perhaps inspire you.

Morning Jog deals somewhat the psychological aspects of monstership, but asks the question of what you might do if you find that it has moved out of the psychological and into the physical.

Columbus Beneath the Mist is a novella built on the more classic theme of: Group of people goes out to.... group of people discovers... then group of people runs for life as one by one they get dead. That theme is a variation of Ten Little Indians by the way. A group of young scientists heads into a newly discovered part in the unexplored part of the Amazon. The team discovers a few things you might expect, but something else that Indiana Jones might even have had some very serious trouble with.

The Boxer could be aptly called Devil Went Down to Mississippi if you like. It is a dramatic novella that deals with man's inhumanity to man and the lengths people might go to get what that want out of life. 1920's bare knuckle boxing and a young bruiser that cannot be beaten decides he needs even more power than he already has. This is done for a girl of course because girls cause guys to make crazy decisions. Of course there are consequences. There are always consequences.

Mr. Chevalier and the Curiosity of Jeremy Cutler, is in a sense two stories in one. The story is essentially told to you by a Hitchcockian third party. So, one story could be considered more of a strange drama, while the other story deals with the possibility of discovering a monster right next door to you.

Death Girl is just that. I don't have anything else to say other than that. Listen to Don't Fear the Reaper by the Blue Oyster Cult if you need a reference.

I am James Gabriel. I have been writing for more than twenty years. This is my first book of short stories. I have completed six novels, of which are available for download on Amazon/Kindle The Grinn: Tales of the Cheshire Cat and Roads Diverged book 1 of the Other Coming Series. My background is poetry and spoken word. Three years ago i completed a one-person show entitled Heavy Like the Weight of a Flame that got great reviews and reached the Edinburgh Festival.
